Suntory to discontinue production due to low stock levels

If you like your Japanese whiskies, stock up as the producing side is seeing its reserve whisky components drying up due to popular demand. Suntory has confirmed it will discontinue its Hibiki 17 Year Old Japanese whiskies “at some point” after this year due to supply shortage of the base components that are to go into their whiskies of older age designations.

When the official news break, prices are bound to surge one or few notches up. Stock up a few whether you plan to drink it or cellar it for longer.
